

10-1
195

COMMENT

03/05/10

Mr. David Stawick

Sir it has come to my attention that there are proposed changes that are being looked into that can affect the FOREX trading environment. It seems to me that the proposed changes would have a negative effect on the overall market for the consumer, and not be appropriate at all.

If an individual wants to risk there money in any form of investment, and doesn't take the time to do research on how to use the investment, then they deserve to lose there money. If they do all of these things and still lose there money and there was know third party manipulation then it is just Bad Luck or a flawed business plan. Many restaurants, grocery stores, and the like, go out of business on a daily basis because of this exact thing.

What you are proposing dose nothing to change a persons action but it dose make it much more difficult for people who are making the right choice with there money, much harder for them to make money. In the given environment that dose not sound like a good idea.

This is the same type of thinking that people have, when it comes to having the ability to short the stock market. That it is a bad thing, a taboo, down right Un American. But if you are long a company that has lied to the public about there earnings, has a product that may be faulty or on the brink of a recall but know one knows about, and the stock is going to the moon with know end in sight, you are as right as rain for buying it. Please tell me the difference?

Please don't make a decision because of political pressure or because of someone who lost it all for not have the proper education. There is risk in everything good bad or otherwise there just is. I say no to the new regulation!

Thank you
Mike Burster